

TWO LADS HURT BY EXPLOSIVES

Leslie Newton Badly Cut by Flying Fragments of a Tin Can.

KIDS RUSHING THE SEASON

UDY DICKERSON LOSES PORTION OF HIS RIGHT HAND.

Although the Fourth of July celebration is still several weeks away, the increasing number of accidents to boys through powder explosions and the accidental discharge of firearms is causing considerable uneasiness among parents, who are trying to figure what July 4 will be if it is marked with any more casualties than an ordinary day of the vacation season. It is said that the accidents began soon after the closing of the public schools.

Experimenting with powder almost caused the death of Leslie Newton, the fifteen-year-old son of John Newton, of 48 North Second West street, on Saturday night. The boy is now in the care of Dr. A. S. Bower and, while badly injured, will recover to take a hand in the Fourth of July celebration.

Young Newton secured some powder and, about 9 o'clock on Saturday night, retired to the backyard with some of his chums to practice for the approaching celebration of the nation's birthday. He fired a tin can with powder and rocks and attached a piece of fuse. Then he struck a match. But there was something wrong in his calculations and the powder exploded.

The boy was hurled to the ground and his frightened companions scattered in dismay.

When help reached young Newton, it was found that he was in a serious condition.

His left shoulder was cut and torn by pieces of tin from the demolished tin can, his face was badly cut, his left eyelid split and his right eye singed with powder.

Pounds a Dynamite Cap.
Love of hearing the sound of explosives may cause Udy Dickerson his right hand. Udy is 10 years old, and lives with his parents at 228 West Third South street.

He is now at Holy Cross hospital because he pounded a dynamite cap with a rock about noon on Saturday. Three of his fingers have been amputated, and there is fear that it may be necessary to amputate the hand.

The past week has been a strenuous one for the boy. Last Wednesday, he was shot through the cheek by a boy companion, Hugh Sulko, of 348 West Third South street, who had a .22 caliber revolver which he did not know was loaded. The result was a very narrow escape from death, by little Udy.

But Udy is a slightly boy, and the wounded cheek did not keep him at home long. He was out with his boy companions on Saturday. While they were playing about a vacant house, which had formerly been occupied by some Italian laborers, the boys found a box of dynamite caps. The Italian laborers had used them in blasting.

The little boys thought that the caps were intended for an old-fashioned shotgun and as they did not have a shotgun handy to make a noise with, they decided that the next best thing to do would be to hammer the caps with their hands so as to make an agreeable noise.

Udy got a rock and pounded one of the caps. Instantly there was a loud explosion, and the boy was knocked to the ground. His little companions ran to him and found that his right hand was terribly mangled.

The boy was at once hurried to Holy Cross hospital.

CAPTAIN BERTHOULD WAS A PIONEER IN WESTERN RAILROAD BUILDING

Capt. E. S. Berthould, the civil engineer whose death in Golden, Colo., on Saturday was told in yesterday's dispatches, was a close friend of Joseph Luce of 29 South Sixth East street, Salt Lake.

Captain Berthould was a conspicuous figure in building up the west. He made the surveys for many of the roads of today. One of his surveys was from Denver through the Uintah reservation to Provo and thence south through Fillmore and Beaver to St. George and West to Las Vegas, Nev. That survey was made in 1862, but it has never been used, although parts of it have been followed by engineers who have run the lines for later railroads.

In 1878, while Captain Berthould was making a survey from Pocatello, Idaho, to Helena, Mont., for the Utah & Northern railroad, he was asked to make a survey from Denver to Leadville for the Colorado Central. At that time Leadville was first attracting the attention of the world because of its great mineral deposits. As Captain Berthould could not make the survey to Leadville he asked Mr. Luce to take charge of the work.

Mr. Luce was at the time in charge of the Colorado State School of Mines, and he secured a leave of absence to undertake the important piece of railroad engineering. It was on this line that the famous Georgetown loop was made, between Georgetown and Silver Plume.

STENOGRAPHER BREAKS QUARANTINE AND DEFIES HEALTH AUTHORITIES

For escaping from quarantine and defying the city health authorities, William A. Scheetz, stenographer in District Judge Lewis' court, will probably be arrested today. Dr. S. G. Paul, assistant city physician, stated yesterday that he would ask City Physician Stewart to instruct Sterling Evans, superintendent of fumigation, of the health department, to apply for a warrant for Scheetz's arrest in the police court this morning.

Scheetz boards at the house of Mrs. Annie M. Hitch of 262 East Fourth South street, who recently recovered from a mild attack of smallpox. The city health department did not learn of Mrs. Hitch's condition until a few days ago. Every occupant of the house was at once placed in quarantine. Scheetz was one of the number. He was told that he would have to remain in the house until he was vaccinated and until the place was thoroughly fumigated.

The same day Judge Lewis' court was fumigated, as the stenographer had worked in the court while Mrs. Hitch was under treatment.

Last Saturday Evans went to the Hitch house to take down the quarantine flag and to fumigate the garments of the occupants before they were allowed to appear upon the streets. He found that Scheetz was not there and was informed that the stenographer had left the house on Friday night.

As Scheetz did not consult the health authorities before leaving the house, he was reminded that he had committed a misdemeanor, which is punishable by a fine of $100 or sixty days' imprisonment in jail.

To this, according to Superintendent Evans, Scheetz replied: "I can't do anything with me. I am in Judge Lewis' court."

Dr. Paul says he is determined to convince Stenographer Scheetz that he is not above the law. Dr. Paul believes the smallpox situation to be critical and attaches the greatest importance to a strict observance of the quarantine law.

MRS. HOWARD PLAYFULLY SNAPS TRIGGER AND SHOOT WILLIAMS IN THE NECK

Mrs. Thelma Howard, when she shot J. E. Williams at the Empire hotel yesterday morning, did not think the revolver was loaded. She thought that it was only half-loaded. It proved as serious a mistake as though she had followed the usual course of thinking that the weapon was empty, as Williams is now at the Latter-day Saints' hospital in a serious condition. A bullet from Mrs. Howard's revolver entered his neck between the ears, and it was upon the floor with the bullet struck in its neck, the bones in Williams' neck and it is feared that the spinal cord has been injured.

Williams is a colored sewer worker, and Mrs. Howard has charge of the Empire hotel.

The revolver had been left at her place by its owner. In the chambers were two cartridges. The woman was of the opinion that she could snap the trigger three times before there was danger of discharging a cartridge.

In this belief, she playfully snapped the weapon at Williams.

Williams was allowed to sleep in the room, and he had told the story of having been attacked by robbers to shield himself from blame because of his carelessness.

The man who rushed to put out the blaze discovered Allington lying upon the ground near the store, apparently unconscious. He said that when he went to the store to go to bed he was attacked by thieves, who were hiding in the place. He claimed that he had been knocked senseless by a blow upon the head.

The store was completely destroyed. After an investigation by Detectives Shannon and Wilson, Allington was taken into custody. He spent nearly a week in the city jail and then confessed that he had accidentally set the store afire and had told the story of having been attacked by robbers to shield himself from blame because of his carelessness.

Orpheum Theatre Management Shows Appreciation of an Excellent Orchestra.

Following a pleasant annual custom, the management of the Orpheum theatre entertained the members of the orchestra at a supper at the Commercial club Saturday evening, the occasion being the close of the vaudeville season. Representatives of the morning newspapers also were included among the guests.

Parley F. Jensen, acting manager of the Orpheum, presided as dispenser of good cheer. He struck a true and responsive chord, however, when he referred to the assurance of the first manager that the most valued attributes in the relations of man and man. He told the assembled members of the orchestra that the management most appreciates the efforts of each individual member, and looks upon the orchestra as a headliner at every performance.

He told the assembled members of the orchestra that the management most appreciates the efforts of each individual member, and looks upon the orchestra as a headliner at every performance.

Howard Garrett related some interesting history of the Orpheum theatre. He said that $20,000 was invested at the outset on the unsupportable word of Martin Beck that he would furnish the attractions. He showed that the management has something besides dividends to think of when he remarked that the Katherine Grey engagement last week closed with a net loss to the house of $1,200. He mentioned numerous occasions at which Martin Beck had demonstrated

BRINGS SUIT IN WILSON'S BEHALF

Provo Attorney Takes Tangled Mining Case Into United States Court.

An action was filed in the United States court Saturday morning which is a bit out of the ordinary. Murray M. Kellogg, an attorney of Provo, brings suit, as the next friend of William J. Wilson, to have a long-standing and terribly tangled mining case settled by the court.

Wilson is an inmate of the mental hospital and is incurable, and, being such, he is incompetent to sue in his own name; wherefore the suit is brought by the "next friend," who is also designated by a Latin term which got lost in the shuffle.

It is alleged that Wilson and Louis Martin discovered and perfected title to certain mining property, which has since become extremely valuable. An agreement between Wilson and Martin was that, when Wilson left the state, he left his interest in the hands of Martin, but the latter was not to distribute any of the property owned jointly unless $10,000 be secured to Wilson as his share. It appears that Martin did not fulfill the terms of this alleged agreement and did dispose of the property, directly or indirectly, to Jesse Knight, the president of the Plutus Mining company, and David Evans, the president of the Juab Mining company. These companies and their presidents are made defendants.

The court is asked to determine the right and interest of each, so that Wilson may have the benefit of any property that of a right ought to be his.

Wilson is the man who attacked John McChrystal and vowed that he would take his life. He was adjudged insane, but was permitted to have his freedom on condition that he would leave the state. Later he made other threats and on a second hearing he was sent to the asylum, where he now is.

ALLINGTON UNDER ARREST
Hero of Incendiary Fire Fake Is Charged With Robbing His Sleeping Companion.

Harold Allington, the 20-year-old boy who was the chief actor in the mysterious fire which a short time ago destroyed the grocery store of Westwood & Sons at 928 West Third North street, was arrested yesterday afternoon and taken to the city jail by Detective Shannon. He is charged with having stolen $21.50 from Edward J. Stutz in an Ogden lodging house.

Allington and Stutz for some time past worked at Cottonwood. A few days ago they went to Ogden and engaged a room in a lodging house. That night, while Stutz was asleep, Allington arose from bed and departed. In the morning Stutz found that his money, $21.50, was gone. He accused Allington of taking it.

When Allington was arrested he had $16.50 in his possession.

Up to the time of the Westwood fire Allington was allowed to sleep in the rear of the store. One night the store was found to be on fire.

The men who rushed to put out the blaze discovered Allington lying upon the ground near the store, apparently unconscious. He said that when he went to the store to go to bed he was attacked by thieves, who were hiding in the place. He claimed that he had been knocked senseless by a blow upon the head.

The store was completely destroyed. After an investigation by Detectives Shannon and Wilson, Allington was taken into custody. "Just the most delicious candy ever tasted," seems to be the universal opinion of SWEET'S SOCIETY CHOCOLATES. It could hardly be otherwise, considering the grade of materials used and the manner of making, for neither time or expense are spared in maintaining the uniform quality which was established only after months of experimenting and blending of flavors to produce a confection entirely different and superior to anything ever made anywhere.
